Col. J. C. Miller Tells How He Happened to Take Hold of the Willard-Fulton Match.

Copyright, 1918, by The Press Publishing Co. (The New York Evening World.)

"I'm not a fight promote and I don't know anything bout fights. I've only seen 'wo ring fights in my life, and I saw these by accident more than design, you might say. I happened to see Fulton and Bill Tait, and I happened to be down in New Orleans and go to see Fulton fight Moran. I tell you, that Fulton can fight.

"After the fight I happened to meet Mr. Collins, with Fulton, and Mr. Collins suggested that I tell that friend of mine, Jess Willard, that Bulton has a most almighty hankering for to fight him. He's so plumb determined to make Willard meet him in a fight that he's been sending Willard telegrams and letters, which Willard doesn't take the trouble to answer. He says Fulton knows he can lick Jess, and if Jess doesn't give him a chance pretty soon he'll just naturally have to hunt Jess up and lick him right in his own fight, and Jess said:

while Willard and Fulton are fighting at the rate of $34.73 per second, the promote a fight, said Jess. So the upshot of it was that I got the terms Willard would be willing to fight on, and within two hours I had made Fulton an offer.

"Funny thing, I didn't tell Jess' before everything was signed up just what I agreed to pay Fulton. Jess thought about $10,000 would be right for Fulton's end, as Fulton had been challenging and offering to fight him for nothing. But when I taiked it over with Collins it was another story. Collins wanted $40,000 for Fulton. He pointed out that as things are be can go out and get a lot of money with Fulton, where he's worked himself up to, but if Jess happens to beat him he'll be down again. So I agreed to pay him $20,000 for his would pay to the wages of $55 soldiers for a whole year.

It didn't cost anything to see Willard and Fulton shake hands over their signed articles in Chicago, but it will take a king's bankroll to see 'em shake each other's teeth in the ring.

LIMPID LIMERICKS.

A garrulous duffer named Bogie was a most absent-minded old for his end. You see as Jess is to get to per cent, Jess is really paying Fulton $15,000 of that money and I'm paying him $20,000 of the control of th

HE Colonel gave some inside "dope" on Willard.

"Jess is in better shape than people think," he said. "He does a lot of gymnastic training right along, and he doesn't carry much fat. The only thing I'd like to see him do before fighting Fulton-since I saw Fulton lick Moran-would be to have two or three fights. But it's too late for that. There's a sort of a gentleman's agreement between Fulton and Willard that neither will take on any other fights between now and July 4.

Willard isn't as popular as he might be, but it isn't altogether his fault. Jess wasn't well alvised. It was Willard-Jones that became so unpopular. I saw a lot of Jones and Willard with the circus. Jones was always right at the gate counting the money. He had an eye for money, all right. Wihard was getting a lot of money under his contract, but after a little when we were taking in more every week Jones came around

The big boy isn't satisfied with his contract. I've been arguing with him, but it's no use. He thinks he isn't getting money enough for his work, and I can't centrol him. He's likely to lay right down and quit and go home.'

"Oh, well," we said, 'we'll fix it up and give him a little more money. So we fixed up a new contract.

"That was all right for a week or so, and then we began pulling in quite willard and Jones and Monahan and shade of defeat. the rest were introduced. Jones came around again.
"The big boy isn't satisfied,' he said. 'He sees all this money coming in and he feels that he isn't getting what he's worth. There's no use arguing with him.'

"He's under contract,' we said.

"I know, says Jones, 'but the big boy isn't satisfied. I can't control him.
He wants to go home unless he gets more money."

"So we gave him some more money and everything was all right again
